Discover the incredible social, cultural and academic opportunities offered by the Osher Lifelong Learning Institute (OLLI) at George Mason University. This 1200+ member nonprofit organization has convenient campuses in Fairfax, Reston and Sterling, and offers you the opportunity to:

- * Take unlimited classes on a wide variety of subjects with no grades, no homework, no exams -- just learning for the pure joy of learning.
- * Meet other passionate and inquisitive people of all ages.
- * Hear noteworthy speakers, including Washington newsmakers.
- * Socialize in special interest clubs and activities.

For people who love to learn, OLLI is a dream come true. You can take classes on everything – acting, history, current events, movies, languages, writing, you name it! But OLLI isn't just about classes -- everything takes place in a social context. There are concert series, field trips, loads of parties and the opportunity to just hang out in the social room to enjoy a book (we have a free lending library), coffee, cookies and OLLI friends.

Visit the OLLI website at <http://olli.gmu.edu/> to check out our course catalog, E-news newsletter and all of our different activities. If your curiosity is piqued, sample once up to two classes for FREE -- just contact OLLI's Tallwood office to see if space is available.

One of the best things about OLLI is that you will be able meet many interesting people you might never have known otherwise. Members come from a wide variety of different backgrounds and many have had remarkable experiences -- but what they all have in common is having fun learning and sharing knowledge. As we say at OLLI, "Lifelong Learning Has Never Been So Much Fun!"
